

Gender identity is fluid and unstable. The diversity of human sexuality proves the existence of fractures and inconsistency in heteronormative cultural construction, which means it is not total and inalienable. Fluid identity, through continuous fluctuation, blurs the categories of femininity and masculinity.